Memo from

William Safire

An idea?

August 7, 1982 25X1

Mr. William Safire c/o Editor, New York Times 229 West 43d St New York, NY 10036

Dear Mr. Safire

As an occasional reader of your occasional column, I am writing to you with a complaint. There have been numerous rumors for years that there is a large prison system in the Soviet Union. The U.S. ambassador to the Madrid meeting on the Helsinki agreements said there are 1.7 million prisoners in the USSR. That is more than twice the size one could justify for a country of 250 million. Senator 0. Hatch (April 5,1982, Wall Street Journal) put the number of prisoners at 3 million, more than 4 times what it should be. People who have been in the Gulag generally give larger estimates than either the senator or the ambassador. Of course, whenever such estimates are given they are not accompanied by any evidence so don't have much effect.

If it were definitely established that the USSR runs a large system of forced labor then maybe they would have to close down the camps. Maybe Indira Ghandi would find it difficult to make loftily righteous pro-Soviet statements. Maybe Pol Pot would have had a tougher time recruiting his thugs. Maybe a lot of things.

This brings me to my complaint. Why doesn't anyone in the press ask the CIA to release satellite photographs of the prisons so that a proper census of them can be taken? The technonogy that goes into a satellite camera good enough to enable a photo-interpreter to count the number of men standing in a row from a photograph taken from 100 miles up is more than ten years old. The CIA's reflex argument that they have to keep everything secret only makes sense to those who believe a ten year old camera is still secret and that keeping that secret is worth more to us than keeping the prisons secret is to the soviets.

Running concentration camps is the sort of thing people can only do in the dark. I thought it was the job of the press to turn on the lights. When it comes to the Gulag you're not turning on any lights even though you are sitting right next to the switch.

Sincerely	yours

